1.2 Ethical Principles in Caregiving

READING AND VOCABULARY

THE FOUR PRINCIPLES OF HEALTH CARE ETHICS FOR HOME CARE PROVIDERS

There are four commonly accepted principles of health care ethics that providers follow to ensure optimal patient safety: AUTONOMY, BENEFICENCE, NON-MALEFICENCE, and JUSTICE.

1. Match each principle with the correct definition:

a) Autonomy

b) Beneficence

c) Non-maleficence

d) Justice

1. It refers to the right of the patient to retain control over his or her body. In the home health care environment, it begins with the patient's decision to receive care at home instead of a nursing home or assisted living facility.

2. For home health providers, it means having a policy in place to provide care, treatment and services to patients without regard to age, race, religion, sex, national origin or disability.

3. This principle is about "doing no harm", intended for providers to consider if any decision made may harm another individual or society – even it is made to benefit an individual patient.

4. Health care providers are charged with doing all they can to benefit a patient, with all recommended procedures and treatments intended to do the most good for the patient.

1.3 Communication Skills for Caregivers

COMMUNICATION THEORY

Verbal communication refers to the process of communicating through the use of words, sentences and language. Non-verbal communication refers to the process of communicating information through body language, facial expressions, eye contact, intonations, artefacts etc. During most instances, we communicate using a combination of both verbal and non-verbal communication. But, sometimes we communicate using only one medium of communication .

MODE OF COMMUNICATION:

a. Verbal: Verbal communication occurs in a written and oral format. Writing e-mails, letters and SMS includes written messages. Whereas oral communication denotes our speech and interaction with others.

b. Non-Verbal: Non-verbal messages could be transferred through various modes such as facial expressions, eye movements, body movements, hand gestures, silence etc.

Sign languages are the innate linguistic systems that develop within a deaf community and have phonological, lexical, and syntactic levels of structure, just like spoken languages. They use facial expressions to communicate effectively as well as grammatical information.

1. Match the type of communication with the correct definition:

Verbal

1. Use of words and languages. Oral communication and written communication.

Non-Verbal

2. Absence of words or language. Expressed through body movements, gestures, facial expressions, silence, space, touch, smell etc.

2. Greeting and body language
